

Emory Tibetan Studies Program

EMORY UNIVERSITY

Spring Semester
Study Abroad
Dharamsala,
India

Information and Application Materials online at www.cipa.emory.edu/tibetan Situated in the foothills of the Indian Himalayas and home to His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama, Dharamsala is the capital of the Tibetan exile community. Within this remarkably beautiful and culturally rich environment, Emory University and its partner, the Institute of Buddhist Dialectics (IBD), weave together rigorous academic study, field research, cultural immersion, and contemplative practice in order to provide a unique semester-long program for students interested in both India and Tibet.

“It was extremely helpful as a tool to integrate into the community. Being surrounded by Tibetan students, nuns, and monks helped me immediately feel that I had joined a new community.”

Academic Coursework

Classes are taught by both IBD and Emory faculty.

- Buddhist Philosophy and Practice
- Tibetan Culture and Civilization
- Tibetan Language
- Independent Field Research

Cultural Immersion

Students live with Tibetan roommates while on the IBD Sarah campus and then with homestay families in McLeod Ganj. During the program, students participate in weekly field trips, celebrate several important Tibetan and Indian holidays, and attend numerous cultural events, including Tibetan Uprising Day, Shoton (opera festival), a trance by the Nechung oracle, a session of the Tibetan exile parliament, and teachings by the Dalai Lama and other meditation masters. Many students also hike, do volunteer work, learn Hindi, or take a Tibetan class in cooking, dance, or music in their free time.

A Class with the Dalai Lama

As part of Emory's on-going partnership with the Tibetan exile community, the Dalai Lama has been named Presidential Distinguished Professor at Emory, the only university appointment accepted by the 1989 Nobel Peace Laureate. In this capacity, His Holiness offers a private class every spring to our program participants that is always a highlight of this exceptional program.

Eligibility Requirements

Applicants must have completed at least three semesters of college-level work and be currently enrolled as an undergraduate at an accredited institution the semester prior to the study abroad semester. Former program participants include students from Columbia University, Barnard College, Williams College, Colorado College, Rice University, Stanford University and Emory University.

“MEETING THE DALAI LAMA
is an incredible experience, but equally wonderful was becoming a member of such an interesting and diverse community. In Dharamsala, every day offered something new to me, and the majestic Himalayan mountains provided a beautiful backdrop. Being on this program was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, and I am very grateful that I took part.”
