

Study Abroad in History

Benefits of Study Abroad for History Majors

For History majors, the experience of witnessing historical sites in person after years of studying them in the classroom is incomparable. Complementing your Emory education, academic institutions abroad offer a wealth of historical documentation and sources to deepen and enrich your understanding of history.

Studying abroad offers you the opportunity to study history from the perspective of another culture and increases the significance and focus of your studies.

The Department of History and The Center for International Programs Abroad (CIPA)

encourage History majors to explore the possibilities of earning part of their Emory degree during a summer, semester, or year abroad.

Study abroad also offers personal benefits by providing opportunities to enhance your academic career, to prepare yourself for the future as a global citizen, to improve your personal sense of independence and maturity, to meet new friends, and to see new places.

History Dept. Q & A for Study Abroad

How many History courses studied abroad can go towards my major?

You may take as many classes abroad towards the History major as you wish, as long as the classes are approved and requirements for finalizing approval are met (see below).

Are there restrictions regarding the History classes for which I can receive credit?

Study abroad courses should be pre-approved prior to departure. The History Department requires evidence of 3,000 words of written and graded work to finalize study abroad credit upon your return. You should keep all work done abroad, including notes, papers, projects, etc. Upon return to Emory, you should submit the work to Becky Herring immediately. She will review the work and finalize the approval at that time. In the rare case that you do not write 3,000 words in your study abroad history class, you may complete an historical essay covering the class topic to meet this requirement. In cases where the work is not completed, a grade of "I" will be posted on your transcript for the course. You then have until the end of the deferred exam period of the next semester (approximately the third week of the semester) to resolve the "Incomplete" or it will become an "IF" grade.

Can I receive internship credit abroad?

The History Department will consider credit for academic internships when appropriate. Please meet with Becky Herring for approval of the internship prior to studying abroad.

"Study abroad transforms the typical historical textbook experience into an incredible hands-on approach. Studying the historical events of the Cold War in the Czech Republic from members of Charter 77 and others that met the Communist regime face to face really brought the academic experience alive. The study abroad experience provided a unique cultural opportunity that changed my perspective on the world and its historical path." Ben Kobren, CIEE Prague

"My experience abroad gave me the opportunity to conduct invaluable research for my senior honors thesis in history. I won the Cuttino Fellowship from the History department to help finance my Summer 2004 trip to Oxford on the British Studies Program. I was able to get a reader's card at the British Library in London, giving me access to all kinds of primary source documents that I would have never gotten a hold of otherwise. It was amazing." Matt Spritz, British Studies
