

Emory's Guide to Study Abroad in Political Science & International Studies

Benefits of study abroad for Political Science/International Studies Majors

Applicable expertise in Political Science and International Studies almost always requires that one has lived and learned outside of the U.S. at some point—why not make a start by studying abroad?

majors to explore the possibilities of earning part of their Emory degree during a summer, semester, or year abroad.

Taking a few courses for your major or minor while abroad enriches your understanding of the material by providing an opportunity to learn the subject from the inside perspective.

Study abroad also offers personal benefits by providing opportunities to enhance your academic career, to prepare yourself for the future as a global citizen, to learn more about yourself, to improve your personal sense of independence and maturity, and to meet new friends and see new places.

The Department of Political Science & International Studies and The Center for International Programs Abroad (CIPA) encourage Political Science and International Studies

Poli Sci/Int'l Studies Department Q & A for Study Abroad

How many Political Science/International Studies courses studied abroad can go towards my major?

You are allowed to take up to four such courses (16 hours) abroad. These courses must be pre-approved by the Faculty Study Abroad Representative. CIPA maintains a list of pre-approved courses for Poli Sci/IS majors, and only courses not already pre-approved need to be approved by the Faculty Study Abroad Representative.

In addition to Political Science/International Studies courses, you are encouraged to take a variety of other courses that take advantage of your overseas location and that allow you to experience topics outside of your major.

Which Emory study abroad programs are best-suited for Political Science/International Studies majors? Please refer to the back of this flyer for a list of programs that offer a substantial number of Political Science/International Studies courses. Other programs may be available but with fewer course offerings. Please see the appropriate CIPA Study Abroad Advisor for more information.

Does the Political Science/International Studies Department accept internship credits? Internships are accepted for credit, but all such internships must be approved in advance by Professor Taulbee of the Political Science Department, and all must result in a research paper of approximately 20 pages.

"The Department of Political Science strongly encourages study abroad because it offers our majors the opportunity to examine a foreign nation while living among its people, learning its language, and absorbing its culture. In the subfields of comparative politics and international relations especially, there is often no substitute for field work conducted in the country or countries being studied." Robert Bartlett, Emory Political Science Professor

"Studying political science in Argentina transformed my understanding of Latin American politics and globalization. Not only was I able to learn about politics from another perspective, but I could also witness political change and problems firsthand. Studying the political situation within Argentina allowed me to see beyond the headlines and journal articles and deepen my understanding." Daniel Brindis, International Studies major, Argentina
